PocketSurfer makes it easy on your eyes

DataWind's PocketSurfer Web Viewer reduces eyestrain that comes from surfing the Internet via your cellphone. When connected to a compatible phone, the checkbook-sized device displays Web pages on a 5.9-inch-by- 3-inch LCD screen. Users also can type and send e-mail and instant messages on the device's 5.7-inch-by-1.5-inch laptop-style keyboard. The PocketSurfer costs $200, plus a $10 monthly service charge. It works with a variety of Bluetooth phones and connects to non-Bluetooth phones with an optional wireless adapter.

Get Internet music without the guilt

TunePlug offers music fans a handy shortcut to "downloaded" music. Developed by online record label Magnatune and tech developer Hana Micron, the reusable Universal Serial Bus drive comes preloaded with music from a variety of independent artists, including electro-pop sounds from Artemis, folk rock by Myles Cochran and 1980s-style new wave rock from The Kokoon. A 512-megabyte version, which includes albums by 10 featured artists in the "Rock Music Collection, Volume 1," costs $70. A 64MB version, which includes a selection of tracks from the 10 artists, plus free downloads for the remaining tracks, is $20. A 128MB version is available for $30, and a 256MB version costs $50.
